HIES Moms Paint "Art from the Heart"

HIES moms create art from their hearts.

A few moms in the Holy Innocents' Episcopal School community are doing a little something special to honor fallen soldiers from Georgia and give their families something that will live on forever.

Leah Henry, HIES mom, started Art from the Heart along with four other Atlanta area portrait artists to help the families of fallen Georgia soldiers cope with their loss. The women founded the Atlanta Fine Arts League in 2005 to generate support for this effort and get more artists on board so that all of the fallen soldiers' families could get a portrait.

"This is truly the best thing I have ever been involved with," Henry said. "It is not political - it's just to put a face with the names and numbers related to the casualties of war. Whether or not you support the war we should all support the troops and their families."

There are now 54 artists participating in this cause, including HIES moms, Wendy Jackson of Sandy Springs and Anna Gillon of Smyrna. Their portraits are on display now through November 11, Veteran's Day, in an exhibition at the National Museum of Patriotism in Midtown.
